The book won the prize for literature in 18.3.2013 – The Association of International Accountants (AIA), the principal accounting body of the International Federation of Accountants (IFAC), today opened its doors in Beijing to welcome its members from all over the world. The visit of the AIA to China is the first of its kind since the formation of IFAC 40 years ago. IndyCar Series president of competition and operations Randy Bernard has been fired by the series. I hear Bernard was let go because of his apparent involvement in alleged dirt-bike dealings that has been ongoing for more than a year, although there are conflicting reports as to what exactly it was that got him fired. The IndyCar Series was left without a president of competition and operations when Bernard was announced as the top official in the series nearly two months ago. According to sources, Bernard was asked to step down, and he resigned. I was told that Bernard was asked to step down because the series felt he should not be in a position to oversee race scheduling and the series' own disciplinary process. The series' president of series operations Tom Gardner has been named the acting president of competition and operations. Prior to Bernard's hiring, the IndyCar Series had no senior executive in that role, and is currently without a president of competition and operations. I'm told that Bernard was not involved in any wrongdoing, but the IndyCar Series felt that he was not able to perform effectively in his role. The series has been without a president of competition and operations since the departure of Bryan "Birdman" Bird, who served as the top official in the series since 2002. He was fired by the series in July of 2011 for an alleged personal relationship with an employee. A replacement for Bernard was also needed because of the importance of the position. His firing comes as a little more than a year after he was named president of competition and operations, and the series has experienced a lot of turmoil since his hiring. I'm told the IndyCar Series will now seek a replacement for Bernard, and that a search is already underway. Follow me on Twitter @TimDLauQ. Add new column 82157476af
